WASHINGTON.

Progress of the Fitz John Porter Case.

The Alleged Quarrel Between Hill and Gordon.

Secretary Sherman Before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11.—Senator Randolph tried to make his speech defending Fitz John Porter to-day, but Logan objected. He will speak Monday. Logan, Garfield and other Radicals have forced this question into a partizan channel, and they will get their fill of it. Porter's friends will prove by documents, issued by Stanton, then Secretary of war, and others, that there was and official conspiracy to degrade Potter. These documents will be produced at the proper time, and Charles A. Dana then assistant secretary of War. Knew of the conspiracy. Ben Hill, says: "All reports of the controversary about Simmons are untrue, nothing personal passed between Gordon and myself. If we reject Simmons, the Radicals will say the Democratic Senate proscribed him because he said secession was treason, and the South cannot afford that. That is why I favor the confirmation of Simmons."

HILL AND GORDON

PINCHBACK

is swearing vengence against John Sherman. He says Sherman and Hayes promised him the appointment of surveyor of the Port at New Orleans and he was to help form a Sherman delegation from Louisiana to the Chicago Convention. Before the nomination was sent to the Senate Lewis, the present incumbent, arrived here and persuaded Sherman he could be more serviceable than Pinchback. Sherman annuled his former promise and retains Lewis. Pinchback, accompanied by Kenner, Busch and other Radical negroes, goes to Louisiana to-night, and they swear they will have the Grant delegation.

CENSUS SUPERVISORS.

The Senate Census Committee will report a large number of Republican nominations for supervisors adversely. They intend to force the President to appoint half Democrats as supervisors.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11.—Secretary Sherman, before the Ways and Means Committee, admitted his views on refunding had modified somewhat, and he was disposed to concede the possibility of negotiating at par a bond bearing a lower rate than 4 per cent.

Nominations.

WASHINGTON, February 11.—The President nominated Geo. Baldry Register of the Land Office, New Orleans; William M. Burwell, Receiver of Public Moneys, New Orleans; Charles G. Belknap, Indian Agent, Tule River Agency, California; William Whiting, Illinois, Indian Agent, at Ponca Agency, Indian Territory.

NO JUMPING.

The Senate naval affairs committee recommend the rejection of the nomination of Schenck for Captain and Assistant Quartermaster in the Marine Corps, on the ground that it is the act of unwarranted favoritism, as it proposes to "jump" thirty or thirty-five senior officers.

INSTRUCTIONS FROM SHERMAN.

Secretary Sherman has telegraphed the Assistant Treasurer at New York to accept all offers of United States bonds at the following rates: 6s of 1880 at 3 3-4 and under, 6s of 1881 at 5 1-2 and under and 5s at 3 1-2 and under.

FORTY-SIXTH CONGRESS.

Senate.

WASHINGTON, February 11.—Mr. Cockrell, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely on the bill granting a pension to the widow of the late General Custer. At the request of Mr. Ferry it was placed on the calendar.

Mr. Garland, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to bigamy and polygamy. Placed on the calendar.

Mr. Randolph moved to take up the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter.

Mr. Logan desired that when the bill should be taken up, it might be outside of the morning hour, so that the discussion would not be broken up by the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. Randolph then asked that the bill be made the special order for Monday next after the mornig hour. Agreed to.

The resolution offered by Mr. Eaton, December 4th, requesting the President to transmit copies of all correspondence with foreign governments or their representatives in relation to the inter-oceanic canal, passed.

The bill directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain Postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866. Passed.

The morning hour expiring consideration was resumed of the bill authorizing the ascertainment of the amount of land leased in military warrants, etc., and Edmunds continued his remarks thereon.

The Committee on Mississippi failed to obtain jurisdiction over the improvement of the Mississippi River and tributaries. The Committee of the Whole deciding 129 to 41 that its sole jurisdiction should be over the levees of the Mississippi.

House.

Mr. Price submitted the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency upon the affairs of the German National Bank of Chicago. It states that the testimony taken demonstrates that great irregularity had been practiced. So far as the Comptroller of Currency and receiver were concerned the testimony indicated a disposition on their part to protect stockholders and creditors. In the opinion of the committee the principal cause of failure was that the directors utterly failed in their duty. The committee recommends that the National Bank act be amended so as to hold all directors to a strict accountability and provide that stockholders whose duty it is to elect directors shall in no case be relieved from personal responsibility to creditors of their bank until they have paid, not only the amount of stock held by them, but also an additional sum equal to said stock. The report was ordered printed and laid on the table.

Warner, from the committee on Coinage of Weights and Measures, reported back the bill amending section 3,564 of the revised statutes, printed and recommitted. It provides that section 3,564 shall be amended to read as follows: "Value of foreign coins as expressed in money of account of United States shall be that of pure metal of such coins of standard weight as compared with pure metal in standard coins of the United States and values of gold and silver coins of various nations of the world known to our commerce shall be ascertained by assays to be made from time to time under direction of the Director of the Mint, foreign gold coins being compared with standard gold coins of United States and foreign silver coins with standard silver dollars, and the result of such assays shall be reported to the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be embraced in his annual report to Congress.

Consideration was then resumed of the court removal bill.

The bill went over without action, and the House went into Committee upon the Revision of Rules.

FROM A COUNTING-HOUSE.

BY H. C. BRUNER.

There is an hour when first the westering sun
Takes on some forecast faint of future red;
When from the wings of weariness is shed
A spell upon us toilers, every one;
The day's work lags a little, well nigh done;
Far, dusky lofts through all the close air spread
A smell of Eastern bales, the old clerk's head
Nods by my side, heavy with dreams begun

In dear dead days wherein his heart is tombed.
But I my way to Italy have found,
Or wander where high stars gleam coldly through
The Alpine skies; or in some nest perfumed,
With soft Parisian luxury set round,
Hold out my arms and cry, "At last!" to you.

OLD JOE GRIMALDI.

The Last of English Clowns—A Sketch of His Life.

[From the New York Sun.]

All things theatrical were a delight to Chas. Dickens; but, as he himself states in many of his letters, he had a special veneration for clowns. As a child, he was accustomed to pester his relatives and friends with questions without number concerning these gentry; whether their appetites for sausages and such things were always the same, and, if so, at whose expense were they maintained; whether they were ever taken up for pilfering other people's goods, or were forgiven by every one because it was only done in fun; how it was they got such beautiful complexions, and where they lived, and whether they were born clowns or turned into clowns as they grew up. It is no wonder, then, when later in life he heard that Grimaldi had left some memoirs behind him, that he was in a perfect fever to see and to edit them. The labor was evidently one of love, and you can see the delights—the ten thousand million delights—of pantomime come streaming on him in every page.

George Fox was the first and last of American clowns, an artist of rare, quaint humor, racy of the soil, in action what Artemus Ward was in writing, one whom John Oxenford of the Times pronounced, when visiting this country, one of the greatest artists he had ever seen. Gabriel Ravel was the last of French clowns. To unravel the mysteries by which the Ravels delighted the children and grandchildren of the present generation of men, and won almost the personal affection of so many in this country, where their name is still treasured as a pleasant household word, would be as difficult as to fathom the existence of those fairies who are said to make merry amid nooks and ravines and the depths of the forests. Gabriel was essentially an artist of the old French school—the Talma of pantomime. Goldoni would never have driven the Harlequin from the Italian stage if he had seen him. The wonder was, he was essentially a cosmopolitan harlequin—a Bohemian. The graceful French element dominated, but he had a good deal of the broad humor of Jack Pudding and the comical impassability of a Westphalian Hauswurst, while in the quickness of his movements he excelled the Italian Arlechino, who for so many hundred years made the delight of Venice. We had the happiness—though such nights of parting with a great artist are always touched with sadness—of seeing him the night on which he appeared for the last time on any stage in Augustf 1860, at the Winter Garden, under Stuart's management. The pantomime was the "Magic Trumpet." When he first entered, whitened from head to foot, he forcibly reminded you of a perambulating sugar loaf. As he came on the stage like a vision of flour and sugar, those who looked at him instantly parted with all serious thought. His drollery was immensely enhanced by the use of the eye, which sent forth irresistible darts of comicality when his audience was least prepared for them. The magic influence exerted by these singular eye surprises was attested by screams of juvenile delight and peals of silvery girlish laughter. At other times Gabriel reminded us of Vatel or of some of the thoroughbred "chefs-de-cuisine" of the old regime of the Faubourg St. Germains. These was a sauce piquante about his by-play and at the same time an elegance which associated him in our minds with those masters, the sight of whom made the mouth water.

Joseph Grimaldi was the last of the clowns in a country where pantomime was as much an institution as plum pudding and roast beef. To the artist of the stage, as Rachel used to say in "Adrienne Lecouvreur" with accents of such beautiful sadness, "all that remains is a memory." But may not that magnify and tradition overleap truth? Certainly all who have ever seen Joe Grimaldi speak of him as the embodied genius of pantomime. Other clowns have excelled him in feats of agility and shocking strangeness of postures, dependent upon natural strength or lithesomeness of limb, perfected by early and incessant practice; but Joe's performance was an intellectual conception, and for originality, consistent truth, humor, and spirit, he stood as distinct and distant from all other clowns as the Caliban of Shakspeare from the monsters of all other men. The broad grin which dimpled his features when he threw off his disguise was not a grimace got up for the audience, but their joyous feeling of existence from a full growth, half-idiotic rogue, suddenly bursting into vigorous manhood. That type-defying sound, a sort of "Ya-a-up," with which he first gave to us, was not from his lips a mere conventional stage cry, but an outburst indicative of his exuberant animal life and of his peculiar nature. His thefts and his edible exploits did not seem to have been tricks of vocation, but things to which he was propelled by instinctive propensities—the innatus amor habendi of Virgil's bees. There was a life in his limbs, especially in his "hop, step and jump," or rather in his stepping stride, beyond all other clowns, whether dancers, leapers or tumblers. And, to crown the whole, whatever he did, the spirit, the intellectual spirit of the pantomime clown shone through it.

Dickens' panegyric of Joe may seem strange to those of the present generation who have never seen Grimaldi; but how do they suppose he gained his reputation with those before, who write and speak of him with such exuberant delight? Joe's popularity was not confined to the galleries or pit; he was an equal favorite with the boxes. His clown and his efforts in serious pantomime drew men of judgment and of genius to the theatre when the sock and buskin failed. Majesty itself—though in a critical question kings and queens are not perhaps the highest authority—after sitting unmoved during the play became Laughter, holding both his sides when Joe appeared in all his glory. And we have heard that George III. was so delighted with some peculiar feat of gormandizing that when the curtain fell Grimaldi was summoned by express desire to the royal presence to fight the battle o'er again. Nor was his fame confined to the stage; his company was, in the phrase of the day, "sought after" by men who, if not so fastidious as the same class at present, would assuredly have never patronized what is understood by a mere clown. William IV., when Duke of Clarence, was a friend of Joe. It is clear enough that he was not, as Chesterfield has it, "invited for himself," but for his comic songs and powers of drollery; but this mutatis mutandis may be predicated of any man who moves in "society other than that of his equals—of Horace and Virgil supporting Augustus as of Grimaldi between Byron and another Lord." It seems, too, from the Dickens memoirs that Joe was treated with a kind of descending familiarity; but Grimaldi took care that it should never become an insolent one. Yielding due respect to others, he was himself respected; and leaving the mime on the boards, he gave the company to understand that except in friendly joke it must remain there. Early habits of submission to managers and to a father grotesquely severe might have accustomed him to submit to things that others might deem strong, and his native simplicity of character rendered him the easy dupe of "quizzers;" but as soon as he perceived the scope of an offensive aim, he wanted neither tact nor spirit to repel it and assert the rights of man, whether in conventional matters or morals. To pass from the man to the actor again the reader must not suppose, though we applied the word genius to Grimaldi, that he attained his excellence without laborious cultivation. As is said of Homer, he had all the "necessary learning of his time." He was a machinist as far as related to pantomime tricks; a dancer, both practical and theoretical, as regards what are called "the figure dances" of pantomime; and he possessed the capabilities of a ballet master. He was also no mean critic, an excellent judge of theatrical effect, and a very good playwright in his "walk," coupled with all which he had great readiness and promptitude in action. Hence he was hightly useful in the getting up of London pantomimes, and invaluable to a country manager on his occasional starring excursions. If, as often happened, the piece and the properties were both of the barest, he would in the course of the day improve the working of the old tricks, or throw in a few of his own, which he always carried with him on those occasions. He would drill and organize, if they wanted it, a band of subordinate groups for ludicrous effect, and enrich the mere purposeless skipping about of the country with what is technically called "the business" of the piece.

Such qualifications were only acquired by long and early exercise. Like the other great mimic genius of the century, "Ned" Kean, Joe Grimaldi was trained from infancy to his calling, appearing on Drury Lane boards (November 1781) when but one year and eleven months old. The piece was the pantomime of "Robinson Crusoe," his father playing Crusoe and Joey the Little Clown. His debut was successful, and next year he was engaged at Sadler's Wells, commencing his theatrical labors ere he was three year's old, by performing at two theaters in one night—a practice which continued almost to the close of his theatrical life.

But with this parallel ends the resemblance between the tragedian and the clown. While Kean led the life of a stroller and a blackguard, Grimaldi was exemplary in all the social and domestic relations. His father, who, though severe and eccentric, was economic and regardful of his family, died in 1788, leaving behind him upwards of £15,000. This was all lost through the fraud and insolvency of the acting executor, and from his tenth year Joe was the principal support of his mother. Kean's exhibitions of grief were drunken dramatic and soon over. Grimaldi married young and lost his wife soon after. At first his reason was shaken; for two months he was incapable of exertion, and he lingered over her memory to the last years of his life. Kean's modes of relaxation everybody knows. Grimaldi's amusements were mechanical experiments, playing on the violin, breeding pigeons and making pedestrian country excursions into Kent and Surrey to form collections of insects. The tragedian's ebriety was notorious; it is said that Joe was never seen intoxicated—a wonder in those days. How Kean stood in money matters after the immense sums he squandered we do not know. The moderation of Grimaldi's character confined his actual expenditure below his real gains; but his simplicity facilitated imposition, and he generally lost the surplus through the arts of the designing or his own good nature; but this laxity was confined to himself. When, having indulged in a gig and a country house, the consummation of an Englishman's earthly happiness, with some addition from his second wife's love of luxury, he found matters getting behind-hand, we see him at once putting himself into the hands of a Mr. Harmer, of Covent Garden, removing to London, selling off everything that could be considered superfluous, and in eight months paying everybody in full.

As an actor, the most successful period of Grimaldi's career was from his twentieth to his thirtieth, or perhrps his thirty-fifth year (1800 to 1815); the most profitable from his thirtieth to his fortieth, when the starring system began to get in fashion, and circumstances which at first looked like ill-fortune incited him to follow it. At about 40, however, his health began to fail, and in the spring of 1823 gave way so entirely that he was compelled, with an aching heart, to retire from his profession. His disease was a premature old age, a sort of paralysis of decrepitude which deprived him of the use of his limbs, and was brought on by his severe labor, night after night, at two houses, and sometimes in three or four pieces, all requiring great bodily as well as some mental exertion. This was doubtless lamentable—but we can scarcely join in Mr. Dickens' moralizing on the subject. Grimaldi was the hero of the stage for upward of forty years; he had forestalled youth in infancy, manhood in youth, and reaped as long and as great a harvest of fame as the comedian who appears at 20 and withdraws when he has left 60 years behind him. The moral is that nature gives us but so much of life, and that the end is proportioned to the beginning.

With Joe's retirement from the stage the stern realities of life began. How he got rid of all the money he made latterly (sometimes £1,200 to £1,500 in a few months) does not very clearly appear; but it is certain that his income was not sufficient to support him, moderate as he was. After encroaching considerably on his principal, the apprehension of want began to stare him in the face. By the spontaneous exertions of Miss Kelly, two farewell benefits were got up for him, one at Sadler's Wells, the other at Drury Lane, the people at Covent Garden acting shabbily, and Charles Kemble shuffling to boot. The produce, though considerable, was insufficient, and he was compelled to apply to the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund. The morning after his letter was sent, the Secretary called upon him to say that the Committee had awarded him an annuity of £100 a year, and that he was deputed to pay him the first quarter in advance.

But pecuniary anxieties, bodily pains, and confinement to his chamber were not his only troubles. Domestic affliction fell heavily on Grimaldi. His son, whom he had educated with great care, who he fancied was to equal if not excel his father in histrionic fame, and who, at all events, possessed ability sufficient to have procured him six or seven hundred a year, turned out ungrateful and dissipated to the last degree, dying after a career of the lowest profligacy in a fit of madness brought on by drunkenness. The news overwhelmed the father and hastened the death of the mother. The loss of his wife following his son threw Grimaldi into a stupor of grief, from which, however, he gradually recovered; his health, strange to say, improved, and he wanted not such relief as life could yield him. The brother of his first wife, in compliance with the dying injunction of his sister, never forsook him. His old theatrical companions frequently called to cheer his solitude, and he was nightly carried to a public house parlor, where he spent his evenings among some sedate boon companions, and was then carried back to bed. He also employed his vacant hours by writing his biography, and anticipated a brighter fame from its publication than any he had yet achieved. But while waiting for this crowning glory, the gods gave him, according to the Grecian apologue, the greatest gift they can bestow upon mortals—he was found dead in his bed on May 31, 1837.

It is from this autobiography that Dickens' volumes purport to be written. He states, indeed, that he has done little more than edit the manuscript, so as to make it more readable; but it is obvious that some of the most interesting parts toward the close must have been additions, and probably the curious account of old Grimaldi, senior, the identical person who, to be safe during the riots of London, chalked on his door "No Religion," instead of "No Popery," with incidental passages in other places. Whatever has been done, has been done with wondrous skill, and the result is a work of much amusement and interest, blended with an insight into a subject one never thinks of—the rationale of pantomimic art, as well as glimpses of London and suburban life at the beginning of the present century.

Absentmindedness.

[From the Oil City Derrick.]

An Oil City Irishman, having signed the pledge, was charged soon afterwards with having drunk. "'Twas me absentmindednes," said Pat, "an' a habit I have of talkin' wid meself. I sed to meself, sez I, 'Pat, come in an' have a dhrink.' 'No, zer,' sez I, 'I've sworn of.' 'Thin I'll drink alone,' sez I to meself.' 'An' I'll wait for yez outside,'' sez I. An' whin meself cum out, faith an' he was dhrunk."

THE TERRORS OF FAMINE.

Sickening Scenes of Destitution in the West of Ireland.

[Dublin Cor. of New York Herald, 9th.]

One could fill daily a page of the Herald with the accounts of correspondents, the letters from clergymen and local proprietors and the applications from local relief committees, all full of harrowing descriptions of the distress. It is getting, there cannot be a doubt, more and more intense, and more and more extensive, and the dispensary doctors, who are the rural officers of health, have already reported several cases of that miserable form of typhoid which is known here by the name of the "Famine Fever," from its awful ravages in 1847. Here is a specimen. There are four parishes in Connemara, lying along the southern coast of Galway county. It is said that not one of the three Commissioners deputed by the government to examine into the state of things in Connaught has visited these parishes. Similarly two gentlemen who traveled through the reported distressed districts on behalf of the Duchess of Marlborough are said to have left these parishes out of their inspection. They lie far away from all regular routes. The Work-house, the legal refuge for the destitute, is twenty-six miles away. The process server, however, has visited these wilds. These four parishes cover an area of about forty miles square, and there is not in the whole island a more stricken and woe-begone region. Here is a report which has come up to Dublin about the condition of one of those parishes:

ONE THOUSAND PEOPLE STARVING

"The parish of Carnagh ranges for eighteen miles over the wild, rocky promontory of Erris-annagh. With perhaps a couple of dozen exceptions the whole population, 814 families, numbering some five thousand souls, are on the high road to death by starvation. Hunger has overtaken one-third of them or more already. The local relief committee—presided over by a Protestant gentleman of much local usefulness and popularity, Mr. Hazel, and reinforced by the Protestant rector, as well as by the Catholic priest—have made careful house to house calculations, according to which—of 36 families in the townland of Loughconiere there are 21 at this moment wanting food; 25 families out of the 51 in Kilsallagh; 23 families out of 28 in Rusheen and Drinagh; 20 families out of 35 in Alnabrone; 27 families out of 29 in Bonrouchard, and so on through the miserable roll. Those who have anything to eat are living upon the seed potatoes. Every day some family is eating its last meal of them. Hardly anybody any longer enjoys three meals a day, even of rotten dwarf potatoes. Two meals are now the average allowance. Numbers that I have met squat in their hideous cabins around the morsel of live turf all day long in order not to awaken the pangs of hunger by active exercise, and think themselves happy if the mother of the family is able to beg or borrow a few pounds of Indian meal that they may not go supperless to bed. And oh! the patience, the endurance, the self-sacrifice of those wretched peasant-mothers, who stumble over miles of sharp-pointed rocks with their bare feet to implore that miserable meal for their whining children—who carry loads of turf or dripping seaweed on their backs for ten or fifteen miles like beasts of burden—who alone in those little doomed households seem to have heart or hope left in them! The first stage of starvation is already past for many of the men; they have reached that condition of apathy and languor in which they hardly care to raise their heads. I have come upon them buried in the gloom of their cabins, those frightful, silent family circles—the shivering, half-naked children huddling together for warmth; the mother rocking a little box of dirty rags in which a blue-lipped little baby is sleeping; the man with his hat over his eyes, his head bent to his knees, his eyes staring fixedly forward with a dull, stupefied stare—so sluggardized by want and despair that he hardly turns while he tells you, in his hopeless way, that his last potato was eaten a fortnight ago, and that he has been existing ever since upon a meal per day of dogfish, or periwinkles, or Indian meal gruel. And to think that a fortnight hence every neighbor who gives him charity will be as desperate and forlorn a wretch as himself! Let there be no mistake about it, there is starvation going on far and wide."

SMITTEN WITH FEVER.

Four houses in one hamlet had been smitten with fever. "In one of them—a dwelling wretched in the extreme—there were four fever-smitten patients lying on the floor, laughing and moaning in delirium, with an old woman and little child watching them. The four sufferers lie together, as near as they can be brought to the feeble warmth given out by the little flickering turf fire. There is no bed under them. They lie in their daily clothes, with an old tattered rug around them. One of them is perfectly quiet; the others are tossing in the restlessness of that peculiar form of low fever. There is not an ounce of sustenance in the house, except the drink of milk and the mug of tea which a neighboring farmer has given in charity. The store of potatoes has been exhausted a fortnight ago; not a bag of meal to be had on credit; nothing to do but to beg or starve."

The weather had became bitterly cold and the mountain leehs had become covered with ice. Should the cold continue or become more severe it will work havoc among the weak, half-naked famished poor of Connemara. The Duchess of Marlborough has written to the Mayor of Leeds, saying: "The distress is great and the need urgent. The money intrusted to us shall be well spent. As the spring comes on and the landlords are able to avail themselves of the facilities for giving employment afforded them by the government I trust distress will decrease." "As the spring comes on?" But it is a question how many of the Connemara peasants will live to see the spring, and of those who survive how many will not be too emaciated by that time to work at all. From the reports which have reached the Dublin Mansion House it seems to be no exaggeration to say that nine-tenths of the whole coast population of Connaught, from Galway round to Sligo, are on the brink of starvation.

A BORN INCENDIARY.

The Sad Birthmark of Mr. Palmer Loper, of Connecticut.

[New London (Conn.) Cor. New York Sun, 9th.]

A remarkable case was developed in the Superior Court that closed its January session in this city on Friday. Palmer Loper is the eldest son of Richard F. Loper, a former Stonington millionaire, who held influential government positions during President Lincoln's administration, invented and built iron ships of war, built and owned many pleasure yachts, including the Josephine, the Madgie, the America, the Magic and the Palmer, and who was transport agent for the government in the Mexican war and the rebellion. Palmer Loper was a prodigal son from his youth, and by his escapades is said to have cost his father over $160,000. His passion, when in liquor, is incendiarism, always as an inciter of others. He has served several terms in the State prisons in New York and Pennsylvania, as the result of his mania for burning buildings. For the last ten years he has been unusually temperate, and has held an important position in a New York house.

Several months ago Loper went on a carouse that brought him to Stonington. He fell in with William H. Merritt, a son of one of the first families in Stonington. They were three days drunk and without sleep. Incited by Loper, Merritt one night built a little fire in an empty barn near the coast. Then he drew a circle of sawdust around the blaze, wetted the circle, and both men quit the building. The wet sawdust extinguished the flames before any damage was done. They were detected, and they have lain in New London jail for several weeks.

Loper and Merritt stood side by side in the court room on Friday afternoon. Loper is 38 years old, and bears a striking likeness to George Francis Train. He was stylishly dressed in black, and was the most notable looking man in the court room. Merritt appeared to be less than thirty years old, and was attired in full Broadway dress suit of green plaid. His closely trimmed blonde beard was parted at the chin. He wore plenty of jewelry, but in good taste. Both men pleaded guilty to an attempt at incendiarism, and in view of the fact of Loper's long period of sobriety and good behavior prior to the offense, and the general disposition of the Stonington people and the owner of the property fired to be lenient, Judge Hitchcock sentenced Loper to jail for one year and Merritt for six months. This decision was in accord with the proposal of State's Attorney Waller. "I hold over Loper," said the prosecutor, in conclusion, "another crime and a more serious complaint, and if, after his release from jail, he does not pursue a steady and sober life we can re-arrest and retry him for this offense."

It is said on good authority that Loper's passion for incendiarism is the result of an accident to his mother that made it a birth-mark. A short time before the birth of Loper, his mother was terribly and suddenly frightened by a conflagration, and the boy first evinced his mania by setting fire to his father's barn.

Fresco Work at the Capitol.

[Wash. Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.]

Persons who have visited the Capitol have been much impressed by the frescos which adorn the dome, corridors, and the various apartments used by the committees. This work, which was begun in 1856, has been under the direction of that master genius, Constantius Brumidi, whose labors in the Vatican, especially in the renovation of the "Loggia of Raphael," had recommended him to the attention of this Government. About eighteen months ago the joint committee on the Library authorized the achitect of the Capitol, Mr. Clark, to undertake the decoration of the frieze of the rotunda. Although Signor Brumidi, during the earlier days of his work on the Capitol, received as high as $40,000 for decorating the canopy of the dome alone, his failing health and incapacity for contecutive work enabled the Government to secure his services for the paltry sum of six dollars per day.

Signor Brumidi immediately began a series of cartoons, which were designed to occupy the full space of the frieze, ten feet high and 366 feet in circumference. Less than half the work has been completed, and much uneasiness is felt, not only on account of the failing health of the aged artist, that will prevent his completing the work, but that it will be extremely difficult to find a fresco painter in the country capable of continuing the work in the same character of art. The stple of the work is in light and shade, simulating "basso relievo," and from the pavement of the rotunda, at an altitude of 96 feet it is difficult to distinguish between the fresco and actual sculpture.

Signor Brumidi's health is now such that he is scarcely able to complete the cartoons, much less to undertake the arduous and dangerous work of transferring them to the frieze, on a scaffold suspended at this lofty height.

The joint committee on the library have had several discussions regarding this work, and the employment of an artist capable of finishing it. The gentleman most prominently mentioned in this connection is John LaFarge, of New York, whose great work in the decoration of Trinity Episcopal Church at Boston has been called to the attention of the committee. It is stated that this is one of the finest ecclesiastical edifices in America, and the decorative art displayed is without rival on the continent. It has been suggested that a commission be sent to Boston to examine this work and report.

The Old Lobby King.

[From the New York Tribune.]

Mr. Samuel Ward's reported intention to spend the rest of his life in England, where he is negotiating for a set of chambers in the Albany, is pleasantly commented upon by Edmund Yates, in the London World. "Mr. Ward," it says, "has the combined capacities—qualities much less frequently united than is generally supposed—of enjoying life himself and of giving enjoyment to others. If he permanently pitches his tent among us London will be the richer and New York the poorer. He will take his place in that distinguished list of cultured Americans who have found a congenial home in the old country—a list which includes the names of Washington Irving, Motley, Hawthorne, and to which that of James Russell Lowell will in the future be added. Names are not wanting with which ideas are associated at once gentler and more dazzling. America has not only given us social accomplishments and intellectual culture; it has enriched us with an overflowing measure of feminine beauty. Cynosures of transatlantic loveliness delight multitudes in Hyde Park and glow in the firmament of London drawing-rooms.

A Parisian Celebrity.

[From the Parisian.]

"There is a young woman—there are, indeed, several young women, driven to the Bois de Boulogne every afternoon in a carriage with two horses, a coachman, and a footman, the whole valued at 20,000 francs. The young woman to whom we refer was born among the rag merchants of the Quartier Mouffetard, and made her debut at the Closerie des Lilas. At the age of 20 she was engaged at a small theater at the rate of 40 francs per month, and managed to spend more than 33,000 francs in the course of a year, without reckoning the annuity of 600 francs which she paid irregularly to her old mother. The present revenue of this princess of the demi-monde is reckoned to be equal to the combined salaries of two Marshals of France, four Senators, eight Deputies, and twenty-five Judges de Paix. She has ruined many men; she has caused the death of several others, and the dishonor of a still larger number. The honorable company of bailiffs hold the lady in the highest esteem."

ALLEGED HUMOR.

"Aha!" said Bridget, knocking over a prodigal chicken which had returned home after a week's absence, "it pleases me when chickens come home to roost."

"Young man," said Mr. Daniel Rice, "do you want to go down to a drunkard's grave?" "Well," replied the young man, "I don't care if I do. Whereabouts is your family lot?"

A ballet girl, writing to a London journal, says that she is aware that "actresses never get beyond the outskirts of fashionable society." The fact is ballet girls never get beyond the short-skirts of society.

A Russian nobleman lay on his deathbed. One of his curious fancies was to have his wife robe herself in her wedding dress and stand by his bedside. It was a very natural bit of sentiment, and in the course of an hour the beautiful woman stood by his side arrayed in the garments of twenty years ago. "Ah," he sighed, "you looked so beautiful in that dress that I hoped when the angel came he might take a fancy to you and carry you off instead of me."

The London correspondent of the Progress tells of a Philadelphia lady who visited the English metropolis once and was so witty that when she was shopping at 'Louise's" the shopmen crowded in by the dozen to hear her comments on things. Says the correspondent, "She was the only person who ever could bluff madam, and this she did, not by sharpness or cruelty, but by a very highly browned yet nicely iced imperturbable innocence reminding one of a bronze babe."

IN SECRET.

O, weary soul! that yet with willing feet
Wouldst tread o'er many a hard and rugged way
In uncomplaining toil, and never stay
Until within his courts thine eyes should meet
The splendor of his looks—to thee be sweet
That kindly word he spake: "Unto me pray;
Not as the hypocrites, in blaze of day,
In public paths or in the open street;
But in thy closet, kneeling there within,
Unto me make thy prayer, to me thy moan,
And I will hear in heaven, where I abide.
Lo, I will bring the cleansing for thy sin—
Yea, we together shall commune alone.
Shut thou thy door—heaven's gate will open wide!"

CHEWING GUM.

What It Is, Where It Comes From and How It Is Prepared for Sale.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.]

We have it upon common report that chewing gum is a substance well known to the youthful part of the community. The qualities which it possesses at the time that it comes from the confectioner are all familiar to the youngest of us. It certainly seems to be a very attractive edible. The reason for this is not so hard to find. Think how much eating there is in it in proportion to actual weight and cash value. But there is more in chewing gum than is dreamed of in juvenile philosophy. One can easily comprehend the main ingredients of candy, but who, without being told, would suspect that chewing gum is often only a refined product of petroleum? The time was when the fragrant spruce furnished the most common material for the purpose. But this is no longer the case. The reader familiar with the processes of refining coal is aware that the thick brown liquid which comes from the earth, at one stage of its manufacture, is strained through heavy linen cloths. The residuum left after this operation is a dirty, brownish yellow wax that smells abominably. That unpromising substance, melted, bleached, deodorized and prepared for commerce, appears in masses that weigh about one hundred pounds, resembling oblong blocks of clouded ice. It has no odor and no taste except what belongs to any wax in its purest state. It may be used for many purposes, but it is not necessary to describe them now. The manufacturer of chewing gum purchases these blocks ready made to his hand, and at once melts them down. To two hundred pounds of wax he adds about thirty pounds of sugar, and gives the mixture a flavor by the use of some essential oil, as lemon or vanilla, and perhaps adds some coloring matter. The melted mass is poured out upon a clean marble slab and cut in the various shapes known to mastificators.

The youthful epicure rarely becomes so luxurious as to demand balsam of tolu; but, if he does, the manufacturer is ready for him. This resin, which is obtained from South America, is at first in an almost fluid condition. It is the product of a tree known as—now hold your jaw, for the name is worse than a whole box of chewing-gum—myraspermum toluiferum. This balsam is boiled by the manufacturer until finally it is brought to such a consistency that it can be run through rollers. It comes out in the shape of a little slender rod, of a brownish-yellow color, which is cut into pieces, each about two or two and a half inches long. The balsam may sometimes be mixed with a less costly wax, since its flavor is very marked.

The balsam of the "chicle" tree, from Central America, is used in making what is known as snapping gum. It is very ductile when worked and moistened, and the process of making is similar to that of pulling taffy. The original gum exudes from the tree and forms in a mass sometimes several pounds in weight. Even in this natural state it would be a very satisfactory substance to keep the teeth at work. It cannot be worn out.

A NOVEL BRIDAL TRIP.

Floating Down the Mississippi River on a Flat-Boat.

[From the Memphis Ledger.]

It is a little out of the usual order to make a bridal tour on a Mississippi River flat-boat, and it is not often done, but every now and then a spirit of adventure strikes into the heart of a loving pair, and the excursion is made. Last year, or the year before, a Capt. Espy, of Rising Sun, Ind., married a beautiful Ohio Valley belle, fitted up a real bridal chamber in exquisite style, and regardless of expense, started on a voyage to the Lower Mississippi, where the live oak forests tower, and the fragrant orange blossoms spread their odor upon the breeze. The couple passed several months in this way, and the time was delightful for both. Yesterday another pair of bridal tourists went by here, going south on a flat-boat. They were also from Rising Sun, Ind., a short distance below Cincinnati, on the Ohio, and the boat was a month out from her starting-point, the pilot being Capt. Thomas, and the same who steered the Espy boat south last season. It was the silver bridal trip of Capt. and Mrs. William Hemphill, of Rising Sun, a couple well off in worldly goods, and whose residence is the finest and most attractive in the town of Rising Sun. The gardens and groves in which their house is situated occupy 10 acres, all in a high state of culture and carefully kept. In addition, the Captain owns a large and productive farm near by. He has been flat-boating for the past thirty-four years, and this is the first time Mrs. Hemphill ever made a trip from home. Their children are all grown but one, a lad of 14, who accompanies his parents on the voyage. Several of the children are married, and all are well-to-do. The boat upon which Capt. and Mrs. Hemphill are floating down the river contains 5,000 bushels of corn for distribution and sale among sugar plantations in Louisiana. At one end of the craft is a neatly fitted cabin, where a state-room is comfortably fitted for the lady and her spouse. She enjoys the novel voyage, she says, and will not in the future allow her husband to make other trading trips on the river unless he takes her along.

The Mistake of a Lifetime.

[From the London World, Jan. 28.]

So many broad or covert allusions have been made within the last few days to the circumstances which saddened the last quarter of M. Jules Favre's life that it may not be amiss to state the facts plainly, from his own public confession, made in 1871 at the Assizes of the Seine. It seems that about 1842—he was then thirty-three years old—M. Jules Favre fell in love with a married lady, whose husband was not all that could have been desired in point of respectability. The lady left her husband, who subsequently agreed to keep out of the way, and retired to Algeria, where he lived for the following twenty years, chiefly on subsidies forwarded by his wife. Says M. Jules Favre: "Je l'ai aimee passionnement; nous avons passe quinze ans dans une retraite absolue." A child was born. According to the provisions of the French law, is pater est quem nuptiæ demonstrant, it was legally the child of the man at Algiers, but was none the less registered as the child of the lady, father unmentioned, which, at all events, was correct. Two or three years later a second child was born, and was registered as the son of M. Jules Favre by Mlle. C., spinster, which amounted to a crime qualified in the French code as suppression d'etat, the lady's husband being alive.

Lincoln's Tenderheartedness.

[From the New York Times.]

Notwithstanding the extreme clemency of President Lincoln, he would not allow his tenderness of heart to interfere with stern justice when he believed the good of the country at stake. During the winter of 1864, the conduct of the war was the absorbing topic at Washington; the town was full of military and naval officers coming and going; the corridors of the Executive Mansion were so crowded from morning to night that orders were sometimes issued to admit nobody to the building except privileged persons. At that time an Ohio lawyer and his client, an old man, whose son, a private in a Western regiment, had been sentenced to be shot for desertion, were very anxious to see Lincoln, that they might intercede for mercy. They stood in the ante-room from an early hour of the day appointed for the execution begging for an interview. Unable to gain admission, the lawyer entreated several men who had secured an audience to try to move Lincoln to annul the sentence, which, if carried out, would certainly drive the young soldier's parents into a mad-house. The President was in the gayest of humors when his private secretary entered, leaned over and whispered a few words in his ear. His face changed; became suddenly solemn; he reflected for a moment before he replied, "Tell Mr. —— [the father] that I will not see him. I cannot. Do not ask me again. I've read the papers closely. The boy has deserted three times, the last time when on guard in this city. He can not be pardoned. He must be shot." He resumed conversation; but his gayety was all gone. One might have thought that it was he who was doomed. But his mind was made up; his decision was irrevocable. The lawyer, hearing what Lincoln had said, knew further effort to be useless. He crossed the bridge into Virginia with the grief-stricken father, and reached camp in time for a final interview. The parting was so distressing that nobody could witness it. At the close, the old man was led away like one distraught. At 6 p. m. the young soldier walked calmly to his post, admitted the justice of his sentence, and died like an American. He fell dead in the presence of his regiment, three bullets passing through his heart. Lincoln is said to have been so pained by the execution that he never alluded to it afterward. No man was ever stronger and tenderer than he.

What Saved Jackson.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal.]

Mr. S. Park Baker, of Youngstown, N. Y., after having read in the Courier-Journal an account of the Jackson-Dickinson duel, thus writes to a friend in Kentucky: There is one feature about this duel with Dickinson, however, that seems a little peculiar, and that is that Gen. Jackson, who was a very spare man in his person, should have been dressed in a loose-fitting gown or coat, so that his antagonist could not readily tell the location of his body. Dickinson aimed right, and if Jackson's body had been where Dickinson supposed it was, and where, perhaps, the code duello would say it ought to have been, there is no just reason to doubt that Gen. Jackson would at that time have "passed in his checks," for the ball from Dickinson's pistol would have struck his heart beyond any doubt, according to the account of the duel. Now, the criticisim and point I make in the character of "Old Hickory," in respect to this duel is this: Having dressed himself in a manner to deceive Dickinson as to the precise location of his (Jackson's) body, and having received Dickinson's bullet without any serious injury, it was not a just and fair thing in Jackson afterward to take deliberate aim at Dickinson and kill him. No matter what the provocation was on the part of Dickinson which led to the duel, it seems to me that, having resorted to what was then considered an honorable method of settling the difficulty, they were each bound to give the other fair play, and the only excuse or justification I can find for General Jackson for his deliberate and premeditated killing of Dickinson is the fact that perhaps, upon general principles, Dickinson ought to have been killed for slandering so upright and estimable a woman as the wife of General Jackson. In reading an account of this fight I am reminded of the duel between John Randolph and Kentucky's most illustrious citizen, Henry Clay, in 1826, only the termination of this duel was not so disastrous as the former, and yet it might have been if Mr. Clay had not, to some extent, been deceived as to the location or position of Randolph's body, for it was stated by some one that Mr. Clay remarked, after the duel was over, that he might as well shoot at a pair of tongs as at Randolph.

Discarding the Drum.

[From a Recent Paris Letter.]

The idea of disestablishing the drum in the French army, already frequently mooted in France, is again being seriously discussed. In support of the proposal, it is urged that the drummer is useless as a soldier. He can not defend himself, and he is encumbered in his movements by an instrument which, when it is wet, will not give forth any sound. The drum again, is argued, can not be heard at any great distance, and in any case signals given by it are difficult to understand. Impeded by his drum, the drummer, it is further pleaded, rarely steps a full pace, and consequently the marching of the whole column, at the head of which he moves, is disordered. In the French army there are, it is calculated, nearly 3,000 drummers in time of peace and double that number when the army is on a war footing; and it is argued that if these men were given bugles instead of drums they would be able to take their share in fighting as actual combatants. On the other hand, those who object to abolition maintain that the drum can be heard more distinctly and at a greater distance during the rattle of musketry and the noise of battle than any bugle; that its beat would be more inspiriting to men charging than would the discordant and feeble notes which, under the same circumstances, would be sounded by the bugle; that if wet and damp affect the drum, cold will affect much more prejudicially the lips of the bugler, and that the idea of utilizing the latter as an actual fighting man is simply impracticable.

Another Will Contest.

[Columbia (O.) Special to Cin. Commercial.]

There was the starting here to-day of what promises to be the biggest social sensation Columbus has enjoyed for some time. Two years ago Mr. John G. Deshler, one of the wealthiest men in Columbus, and best known man in the State, died, and left all his great fortune to his wife, M. Louisa Deshler, a lady well known all over Ohio and the center of a brilliant social circle. She was, before marriage, a Falconer, of the Falconer family in Hamilton. Soon after Mr. Deshler's death, Mrs. Deshler died, and left by will her whole estate, divided about among all sorts of institutions, old servants, social favorites of hers, etc. There was much dissatisfaction expressed among the relatives at her disposition of the property, and to-day the dissatisfaction took shape in a petition to set aside the will. The petitioners are Kate Stearns, Chas. D. Falconer, Harry C. Falconer and Frank Falconer. The property is estimated at over half a million dollars at the least, and the effort to break the will of Mrs. Deshler, from the magnitude of the estate, its distribution and the social prominence of all the people, will create a sensation.

"Drink" in London.

[London Cor. of Philadelphia Times.]

I, for one, am not sorry that "Drink," at the Princess Theater, has collapsed at last and is about to be "withdrawn." I am no lover of the Zolaistic or realistic school. When those two of the Immortal Nine, whose duty it is to preside over the fortunes of the theater, took to "Drink" some six months ago, I thought it worth while considering what would be their next downward step—a realistic scene or so from a certain kind of demi-monde life to be seen in the Haymarket or Leicester Square after dark? Melpomene and Thalia have had to preside of late years over many representations which would have astounded the ancients who first voted them supreme patronesses of tragedy and comedy; but I believe they never yet saw their venerable names associated with so nauseous a subject as that which Mr. Charles Reade has selected for his kaleidoscopic display of horrors now "on view" at the Princess Theater.

Mr. Tilden's Physical Troubles.

[From the Albany Evening Times.]

In a private letter to the editor of the Evening Times, a prominent and highly esteemed Democrat in New York City, who is and always has been friendly to Mr. Tilden, says: "I have become satisfied that Gov. Tilden is and will be physically incapaciated to be a candidate for the presidency at the coming election. * * * You might as well talk about running Silas Wright as Gov. Tilden. In brief, you might set it down as un fait accompli that Tilden is out of the race." This information comes from a source which we are not at liberty to mention, but the veracity of our correspondent is unquestionable, and he is one of the ablest and best of the men who have sustained and adhered to Mr. Tilden.

AMUSEMENTS.

Grand Opera-House—"Le Petit Duc."

A fair audience assembled last evening to listen to Lecocq's opera comique, "Le Petit Duc," as presented by the Grand French Opera Company. Last night's performance was a considerable improvement over Monday night. In the first place the prima donna, although unfortunately still suffering from a cold, was in much better voice and condition, and the role of Le Duc de Parthenay afforded ample scope for Paola-Marie's ability. The orchestra went much better than on the opening night, and the chorus also gave decided evidence of progress. The representation was spirited throughout; the sparkling, frothy melodies of Lecocq's work were rendered excellently, and there was a chic and go about the performance that delighted the audience. Paola-Marie as Le Duc Raoul made a decided hit and established her claims to rank as a prima donna of opera bouffe. She has an excellent soprano voice of fine quality, the upper notes being, however, a little coarse. All the delicate shades of expression were finely portrayed and her acting was highly artistic. The duo "Je t' aime" roused the audience to enthusiasm, and "La petite femme" with its imitation of the old gossip was received with plaudits of applause. In the second act the Duke's assumption of the disguise of a peasant woman was admirable. Mlle. Gregoire gave a vivacious and piquant rendition of La Duchesse de Parthenay, while Mlle. Raphael, as Diane de Chateau Lansac, directress of the Luneville Seminary, was excellent. The school scene and the singing lesson were rendered with a verve and archness that was infectious, and an encore was demanded. Duplan, as Frimousse, the deposed tutor of the Duke and preceptor in the seminary, was exquisitely humorous. His make-up was capital, and as an exhibition of comedy his acting was delightful. His stage business was laughable in the extreme and his lecture to the lady pupils convulsed the house. M. Jouard, as De Montlandry, the preceptor of the Duke in arms, was only fair. The duet, "Le Savant et le Soldat," in the first act, was finely sung and acted by these two artists, and Jouard received well deserved applause for his capital rendering of "Il etait un petit bossu." The chorus was up to its work and "Le Petit Duc" was a decided success. The dresses were gorgeous. This afternoon "Les Cloches de Corneville" is given, and this evening "La Grande Duchesse de Gerolstein," that most popular of opera bouffes, is announced with Paola-Marie as the Duchess, Angele as Wanda, and Capoul as Fritz. Fritz finds favor in the eyes of the Duchess, and is rapidly promoted from private to commander-in-chief, but his love for Wanda procures him as rapid a downfall, while the sighing suitor, Prince Paul, is at last rewarded by the Duchess.

Pope's—"Drink."

"Drink" is proving to be the sensation of the day, and Pope's Theater was filled last night to its utmost capacity. The scenery is magnificent and the greatest attention has been paid to details, so that a perfectly realistic picture is presented on the stage. The citing of the company is really excellent, while Coupeau's death from delirium tremens is thrillingly absorbing. The carousing scene of the jolly trio in "L'Assommoir" brings down the house. "Drink" should be seen by everybody. It will hold the boards until further notice.

Olympic—"Our German Senator."

Gus Williams in his new comedy, "Our German Senator," in three acts and a telephone, is giving a most humorous and laughable performance. His funny sayings, his specialties and songs are greeted with immense applause. His support is very good, and "Our German Senator" is a decided success.

Mercantile Library Hall.

To-morrow night Geo. Vierling's celebrated composition, "The Rape of the Sabines," will be given, for the first time in America, by a full chorus of 110 voices, and a grand orchestra of forty-five selected musicians, Prof. Egmont Froehlich is the musical director. This will be one of the rarest musical treats we have had for a long time, and the concert should be liberally patronized. The work is produced by the German Liederkranz Society.

Theatre Comique.

The programme presented at the Theatre Comique this week is an attractive one and is drawing large houses. McAndrews, Shay, Larry Tooley and the Chrisdi-Zeltner pantomime never fail to excite laughter, while James Hearne, Francis Norton and Miss Josephine Shandley are very entertaining in their respective specialties.

MEMPHIS Appeal, 10: The manner in which the river mail service hence to New Orleans is conducted is a disgrace to the Government and a source of great annoyance to those dependent upon this route for mail facilities. Whether the fault lies with the route agents or the postmasters along the river we do not pretend to say, but that there is shameful neglect and abuse of official position somewhere is beyond a doubt. It is not expected that anything which can be said on the subject will be of any avail in condoning this evil, but one feels better after having had a good growl at the shiftless incompetents who provoke it.

Dr. C. R. Sykes, of Chicago, and the Wonderful Catarrhal Cures He Has Effected.

A Record Unparalleled.

For some unexplained reason Catarrh has in the past been out of the range of medical skill. It is true a few lotions have been applied, which have furnished temporary relief, but practically the disease has been incurable. Such was the condition of affairs when Dr. Sykes, of Chicago, who was suffering from the disease, was declared incurable. In order to save his life he began a series of experiments, and the result was his famous "Sure Cure," which has been the best of blessings to many thousands. Mrs. Nancy Mitchell, of Juniata, Neb., had a hole in the roof of her mouth as large as a 25-cent piece, and most of her nose was eaten away. She returned home completely cured, well and happy. Miss Annie Green, 88 Larrabee street, Chicago, from a cancerous Catarrh, had her palate eaten off and a hole eaten entirely through her nose, had a bad cough, weighed only 85 pounds. Dr. Sykes' plan of treatment made a complete cure three years ago, and it is permanent. Thousands of other cases could be cited if desired. They are not needed. Dr. Sykes has acquired the reputation of being the most eminent Catarrh physician in America, while his remedy can be used at home, and is available to all. The "Sure Cure" and Insufflator all complete are sold for the low price of $1 50 by the Doctor at his Laboratory, 169 E. Madison street, and by druggists. SPEAKING of hallucinations, what could be more painful than the groundless conviction of the able editor of the Globe-Democrat that he is a wag?

JIM BENNETT has stirred them up on the other side of the water. Baroness Burdett-Coutts talks of donating a million or two to poor Ireland.

IT was tolerably well demonstrated last night by the impromptu display on the streets that there are elements in St. Louis for a first-class Mardi Gras celebration—provided there are no snow storms to wade through.

IT was statistically shown at the Lindell Hotel meeting last night that St. Louis could comfortably take care of a National Democratic Convention and its friends to the extent of 10,000. If Chicago can do any better she will have to convert her grain elevators and slaughter-houses into dormitories.

OUR Irish relief boom is not getting on well, but the movement to secure the National Democratic Convention for St. Louis is assuming majestic proportions. The meeting at the Lindell last night was well attended, and a most excellent and influential delegation of citizens is being selected to carry our claims to Washington.

WE publish on our second page to-day a Dublin letter to the New York Herald giving some account of the terrible destitution and suffering on the west coast of Ireland. The incidents reported are sad in the extreme, and it will be very strange if the publication of such news does not give fresh impetus to the noble charity now manifesting itself in every corner of our prosperous land.

MR. DION BOUCICAULT has written a letter to the New York Herald suggesting that the theaters and music halls of the country, which, he says, number between four and five hundred, shall next St. Patrick's Day give a benefit for the relief of the distress in Ireland. He estimates that in this way between one hundred and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars can be raised, which would certainly be a splendid offering upon the part of the theatrical profession. It is to be hoped that the suggestion will be carried out. Will our St. Louis managers make a move?

A GOOD deal of levity is indulged in in this section of the country touching the size of the Sherman party in Missouri. The Grant party may be a powerful organization in this State, but the statistics of St Louis, where headquarters have been established, do not substantiate the claim. At the present writing the Grant Club of this city could ride to the polls in an ordinary omnibus with extreme comfort. A publication of the names of the distinguished members of this organization would exhibit a remarkable state of expectancy and furnish much food for study.

MR. WEAVER, the Greenback Zulu of the House, whose interesting inflation measure was crushed the other day, is on hand with a joint resolution, which he will offer at the first favorable opportunity, which will certainly afford the country all the relief that it requires. He proposes to have the Government issue at once $500,000 worth of soup tickets, redeemable in soup or beer at all United States depositories, and fundable in cabbage leaves bearing the low rate of one-half per cent interest yearly, at the option of the holder. The tickets will be distributed by lottery.

WE are gratified to observe that the City Assembly is taking time by the top-knot in the matter of street-sprinkling. The House of Delegates has invited Mr. Flad to give a public exhibition of his street-sprinkling apparatus, and the Committee on Public Improvements has been instructed to draw up and report a bill granting to the St. Louis Pipe Sprinkling Company the right to lay its pipes in the streets. With all these appliances in operation and an occasional rain, the citizens of St. Louis will be able to get along next summer without eating more than a half pound of pulverized limestone per day.

IN view of the fact that the Globe-Democrat of Monday last contained an able editorial on European politics, in which the Waddington Ministry was discussed as an existing institution, we must conclude that the foreign editor of our contemporary does his work in the remote sections of the Hartz Mountains, and that his belated productions are not squared with the telegraphic news of the day after their arrival in this country. Inasmuch as the Waddington Ministry was succeeded by the De Freycinet Cabinet several weeks ago, it is hardly worth while to be speculating at this late day as to the probable effect that Waddington's resignation would have on European Communism.

IT is announced from Washington that Mr. Schurz is very pronounced in his determination to keep the Indian Territory inviolate, and that he is about to have another terrible proclamation issued, warning the squatters of the pains and penalties which will be visited upon them if they cross to the happy land of Canaan. This proclamation will be all well enough in its way, but it should be followed up by a call for a hundred thousand three-years' troops. Just now the course of Empire tends toward Oklahoma, and all the hooting and scarecrowing of which Mr. Schurz is capable will not deter the adventurous spirits who are bent on planting the banner of civilization on the wigwams of the passive Cherokees and the indolent Creeks. It is all wrong, perhaps, but it can't be helped. When the desperate struggle for existence commences the gentle savage must take a back seat.

OUR highly-cherished contemporary, the Kansas City Times, seems to have an actual supervisorship over the Seymour movement in the trans-Mississippi department. It resents with great indignation the story which we printed the other day to the effect that Mr. Seymour had positively declined to again enter politics on account of his shattered constitution. The Times takes no stock in Horatio's debility. It says that he never suffered in his youth or at any time a distressful sunstroke and affirms—with how much truth we know not—that he never lost an hour's sleep on account of political discussion and that he is in every respect equal to the wonderful old men who walk ten or fifteen miles a day and split a cord of wood every morning before breakfast without turning a hair. The Times says:

> Mr. Seymour is probably better able to stand the "wear and tear" of a Presidential campaign than any man of his age in the country. The Times knows whereof it affirms, and reiterates its assertion of Thursday last, that its personal representative obtained the tacit consent of both Seymour and Hendricks to yield to the voice of the Democracy and co-operate for its success. We assert most positively that while Mr. Seymour does not seek or desire a nomination, he will accept it if unanimously conferred; that Mr. Hendricks will accept the second place on the ticket; that they will be nominated, respectively, President and Vice-President by the Democratic National Convention, and that they will be nominated by acclamation.

Without manifesting or experiencing the slightest levity, and with a full comprehension of the solemnity of the occasion, we desire to remark, in the expressive language of the day, that settles it.

WE published the other day an account of the remarkable petrification of a living child at New Philadelphia, Ohio. A dispatch from there says that Mr. Kinsely, the father, who visited Cleveland with his phenomenal son to consult eminent physicians there, has returned without obtaining any hope of relief. The child's body is daily growing harder and harder. It continues to live but can only freely move its eyes and lips. It sleeps with open eyes, and after waking always suffers intense pain. The case is said to be without a parallel, no instance ever having been known where the entire body was affected. Its arms and legs continue cold and hard, and the entire body is gradually turning into a substance as hard as bone. Ohio has produced some phenomenal people of late years, including John Sherman, Private Dalzell, Hayes and Deacon Smith, but it has never turned out such a solid person as this Tuscarawas county youngster. If it lives it will be a greater curiosity than Deacon Smith, whose physical peculiarties have been so marvelously set forth in the New York Sun, Graphic and other great public journals. There was a story floating around the other day about the finding of a lot of stone giants in a cave in the southern part of the State. Perhaps these fellows were the original citizens of Ohio. The hardness of cheek peculiar to the average Ohio politician would seem to support the theory that the early settlers were either made of stone or some other hard substance and the existence of this living stone child in Tuscarawas county bears out the theory of evolution very ably. After the lapse of ages of progress whole ethnological divisions of men have been known to breed back to the peculiarities of their progenitors.

THE Cincinnati Times attempts to account for the failure of the Mapleson Opera season in the Paris of America on the ground that there is a musical surfeit over there. It says that what with symphony concerts, chamber concerts, rehearsals, preparations for the Festival, and the prospect of the Festival, not to say anything about the little soirees of a private character that are given here and there, and two or three times a week, Cincinnati has about all the music it can appreciatively listen to. "But," says the Times, "what excuse has St. Louis to offer for its mournful failure to respond to the Maplesonian attractions?" Why, Lord bless your soul, we are not only surfeited but absolutely saturated with music over here. Last summer we had "Pinafore" until we couldn't rest. We have had three weeks of negro minstrelsy this season, including Emerson and the Georgia slave troupe, and a week of Rice's Surprise Party. Of course we have private concerts, soirees and musical rehearsals without end. Besides this the winter has been an exceedingly open one, and the organ grinders have not left off for a single day. Talk about being sick of music! Why, you never saw a town so anxious for the base-ball season to open simply as a means of relief from the everlasting twanging of harps, sawing of big fiddles and screeching of high C's.

BECAUSE Cincinnati is only able to muster twelve hotels, St. Louis thirteen and Kansas City thirty-six, the Times insists that the Democratic National Convention must be held in Kansas City. In enumerating hotels in Kansas City it is quite evident that our fugacious contemporary has included all the railroad boarding-houses, gast-hauses and lunch establishments in the town. Metropolitan cities draw the line very sharply between hotels and boarding-houses. The mere hanging of an imposing sign, such as "The Albion," the "St. Nicholas," etc., on the outside of a building, does not constitute a hotel. There must be an enunciator, an elevator and a bejeweled clerk, whose ambrosial locks give forth the rich odor of bergamot. If St. Louis should count its lunch-houses, inns and twenty-five cent lodging-houses, it could run its list of "hotels" up to something like three hundred. It must be borne in mind that delegates to Democratic National Conventions are men of fastidious tastes, and that they will not put up with ordinary frontier fare when they are picking out a boss for the country at large.

A REMARKABLE person named Hart has turned up in this city who claims to be able to solve the mystery which enshrouds the murder of young Harry Baldwin, of Cincinnati. He offers to go to Cincinnati and testify, on the simple terms of having his transportation and expenses paid. It is a thousand dollars to a five-cent piece that this person never saw Baldwin and never heard of him until about the time that he found himself possessed of a desire to visit Cincinnati. The "distant witness" is a favorite dodge of tramps. A few years ago the police authorities of New York were kept busy transporting important witnesses in the Nathan case to New York from all parts of the country. After they had furnished free rides to a dozen or two of tramps, they were able to grasp the situation.

PARSON TALMAGE, in one of his customary pulpit vaudevilles, last Sunday, made the declaration that there was no conflict whatever between science and religion. Mr. Talmage has been engaged for twenty-five years in demonstrating that he knows nothing about religion and the probabilities are that he knows less about science. It is, therefore, more or less impossible for him to know whether there is a conflict or not.

THE macadam paving friends of St. Louis will doubtless draw comfort from a pamphlet recently written by a Texas professor to prove that cities built of limestone are the healthiest in the world, and never much visited by malarial diseases, including yellow fever. The limestone is said to absorb carbonic acid arising from animal and vegetable decomposition.

PARSON COWLEY, of the Shepherd's Fold, New York, has resigned, on the ground that his usefulness as a shepherd has been somewhat impaired. He might get a job as dog-trainer when his little difficulty with the State is adjusted.

LIFE in New Orleans seems to preserve a happy average. There is occasionally some suffering and depression on account of yellow fever, but when the town gets a three days' shy at Mardi-Gras the account is beautifully balanced.

MR. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA pronounces New Orleans the most interesting and attractive of American cities. We regret to remark that Mr. Sala has never visited St. Louis. His testimony on this subject is therefore valueless.

JUDGE FIELD, of the Supreme Court, has expressed himself favorable to the renomination of Tilden. This will upset the plans of those who had about made up their minds to take the Field against Uncle Sammy.

PERSONAL.

—Zachariah Chandler's widow has been very ill ever since the death of her husband, but she is now recovering.

—Ex-Congressman Fred. Conkling says if his brother Roscoe is nominated for President he'll stump the country against him.

—Admiral Paulding's widow, who wishes a pension, says her husband was the last survivor of the battle of Lake Champlain.

—A son and two nephews of Tom Hughes, the English statesman and author, have for several years been engaged in cattle-raising in Texas.

—Grant is fifty-eight years old; Sherman, fifty-seven; Blaine, fifty, and Garfield, forty-nine. Their chances for Presidential nominations are in the order of their ages.

—Mlle. Jorblau has been offered $125 a week to travel next season with the Rice Surprise Party. She has a pair of black eyes, a good form and no voice. She is one of "Pinafore" products.

—A younger sister of Miss Anna Mehlig, who was so deservedly popular in New York, has made her appearance as a pianist in London. Her name is Bertha Mehlig, and, like her sister, she is said to be an artist of decided ability.

—Congressman Cox gets his funny ideas from his wife, and she gets them from the comic newspapers. She cuts out all the jokes she sees and keeps them for use in the House when Mr. Cox feels as though he ought to be funny.

—Lord Dufferin is coquetting with the office of the Governor-Generalship of India. His age, 55, stands in the way, and regard for his children is another reason for hesitation; but then the chance of having in five years £50,000 will be a temptation hard to resist.

—Cardinal Manning's brother, whose death has just been announced, was a man of cultivated taste and a staunch Protestant, so much so that he had provided the money to build a Protestant church. He and his brother, the Cardinal, had not spoken for many years.

—Wendell Phillips, of whom Horace Greeley said that people will read his speeches for pure and elegant English long after his death, is growing old. He is still lecturing. He thinks that Washington gave an example against a third term which, he says, may in an emergency be valuable. He by no means believes that one flag will certainly rule this country fifty years since. He favors the ex-President only on condition that his name is necessary to keep the Union in the control of those who love it, and to keep it away from those who hate it.

Judge Field for Tilden.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

To a friend from the Pacific coast who recently interviewed him about the Presidency, Judge Field said he inclined very much to the renomination of the old ticket, as the most direct and effectual method of rebuking fraud and redressing the wrong of 1876. Of his own candidacy he declined to speak, except to say that the expressions in the Pacific States for him were the "demonstrations of partial friends there." But as yet, he said, he was unable to forsee a contingency in which Mr. Tilden could be honorably or safely set aside.

Bayard's Whipping-Post.

[From the New York World.]

Senator Bayard will not be elected President, Mr. Bob Ingersoll thinks, because his State has a whipping-post. It seems to us that the only objection that could be raised on this ground must come from the friends of a candidate who, if he had his deserts, would be in peril of the whipping-post. Let us see! Whom is Mr. Bob for?

Food for Reflection.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.]

It is safe to assert that there is not a single close State in which the majority of the Republicans are not opposed to Grant's nomination, and in which there is not a considerable percentage of the Republican voters who would not support him if nominated.

The Big Kicker.

[From the Dayton Journal.]

It is the "blanket sheets" that are kicking against the tariff on print paper. They should exercise a little common sense and print newspers that people can read in a day.

Cheapening Them.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

Sometimes it doesn't take much to make a Cabinet officer, but if one can be made out of a small affair like Commissioner Le Duc, then Cabinet officers must come even cheaper in the future.

PUBLIC OPINION.

Smoking on Street Cars.

ST. LOUIS, February 6, 1880.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Whilst the subject of smoking on Olive street cars is being discussed, allow me to add my remonstrance to the rule prohibiting that luxury. The Fifth street line for a time did not allow smoking on their cars, but soon awoke to the error of their ways and rescinded their order. The Olive street cars are the most convenient for me, but I prefer to walk or take the Franklin avenue line in order to enjoy my cigar. As soon as the Olive street company try to please the majority and pay no attention to chronic grumblers I, and many others of my acquaintance, will again patronize their line. WOULD-BE DAILY RIDER.

St. Bartholomew in a Bad Box.

ST. LOUIS, February 11.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

In your notice of the suit of the Butchers' and Drovers' Bank against myself, it is stated that a suit was brought against me to set aside fraudulent conveyances by me made. The suit, though in the name of the Butchers' and Drovers' Bank, was brought by one Bartholomew M. Chambers. There is not one word of truth in his allegations. I am not indebted to the bank if settlement was made between it and me, and not through Chambers. I never made a fraudulent conveyance. There is no final judgment against me, and the suit was brought by one who usurps the title of Butchers' and Drovers' Bank from malice and personal spite. But if Chambers can pay a final judgment he will find it in the Sheriff's office for over $11,000 against him and in favor of a "widow and orphan." P. S. LANGTON.

A Mardi-Gras Idea.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Two or three alleged Mardi-Gras processions were wandering about the city at a late hour yesterday evening in honor of the day, and while these two bands of hops deserve much that is complimentary on their fortitude and constancy of mind they being up the other question, why can not St. Louis have a really good Mardi-Gras procession as other Southern cities have? As matters now stand we crowd into one brief, delirious week all the pleasure of the year; we emphasize the Fair with the Veiled Prophets, and generally behave ourselves like children who hoard their cake for a gorge. Now I see no good reason why the Veiled Prophets' procession could not be lifted bodily out of the month of October and inserted into Shrove Tuesday night, where it properly belongs. It would spread the events of the year about better, and it would be no experiment, inasmuch as the V. P. have already achieved success.

GARGAUTUA.

A General Disarmament.

ST. LOUIS, February 11, 1880.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Day after day in the Police Court there are from two to four persons fined for carrying concealed weapons. Now, my idea is that we are getting a little too far along with our guns, and, like the Peace Congress, I want to propose a general disarmament. It is an open and notorious fact that every second citizen one meets upon the street is freighted with a revolver, and generally looks upon himself as prepared to be a bad man in a row. All of those whose business keeps them out late at night and who frequent disreputable localities are armed and equipped for any kind of war. The stout old Anglo-Saxon dependence on the sturdy fist to protect the hard head is dying out, and as a consequence from the negro with his razor to the sharper with his sand bag, we are running more to assassination than to fair fighting. A great number of the sacking desperadoes who are always loaded and liable to go off have secured permits from the Mayor for carrying loaded pistols. Now would it not be an excellent idea to publish the names of those gentlemen who have blood in their eyes to let the world know who the dangerous citizens are. A SHOULDER-HITTER.

Charles Stewart Parnell Defended.

ST. LOUIS, February 10, 1880.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

As an American citizen I enter my solemn protest against the language used by Mr. Michael McEnnis in his speech before the Merchants' Exchange while discussing the advisability of the St. Louis merchants sending a ship-load of provisions to the famine-stricken people of Ireland. Mr. McEnnis is pleased to term Charles Stewart Parnell a communist and his sympathizers "cliques"—which, to say the least, does not count very much for Mr. McEnnis' intelligence. If Chas. Stewart Parnell were a poor man and depending on his talents for a living the assertion of Mr. McEnnis would no doubt have some weight with many people who take no interest in the man or the cause he so ably advocates. But since it is a fact well established that Charles Stewart Parnell is a man of wealth, having an annual income of over $10,000, it is not fair to say he is a communist. I challenge Mr. McEnnis or any other man in this community or the country to prove that Mr. Parnell ever uttered an expression in his speeches which would even indicate communistic theories. I challenge Mr. McEnnis or any other man to prove that Chas. Stewart Parnell ever advised the Irish tenant farmers not to pay their debts. I challenge Mr. McEnnis or any other man to prove that Mr. Parnell ever advocated robbery or plunder. To say that he has done so is a slander that must be flung back in the teeth of the man or men who give utterance to such falsehood. Oh, how perverse thou art, human nature! How wonderfully wise some critics are! Perhaps if Mr. McEnnis could devote a little of his valuable time to acquiring a better and a more thorough knowledge of the history of the land of his father, he would not so readily attack a man whose course is according to the highest authority inspired of Heaven, for who is there so great, and noble, and grand among men as he who sacrifices all he has and is ready to give up his young life that his fellow man might be allowed the privilege to live? Parnell is the incarnation of an exalted manhood. His mission is the mission of a patriot. His thoughts and his acts are the thoughts and acts of a hero, and he ranks with our own ever to be revered Washington in the disinterestedness of his career. Traduced and vilified, caricatured and condemned by the self-elevated giants of this wise world, he still moves on and on, true to his mission and faithful to his people. O, God of mercy and of love! guide and guard him and spare him until he realizes his fondest hopes—the regeneration of his native land. God pity McEnnis, save Ireland and protect Parnell.

SIC SEND FOR MCENNIS.

Rheumatism Sixteen Years

I suffered so severely that I was often robbed of my night's rest; a change of weather would have most painful effect on me, for then I could not move my hands or feet. Half a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil cured me.

THOMAS OTT, St. Boniface, Pa.

Second District Police Court.

There were fifteen cases docketed in this court to-day. Peter Dessner, John Hopkins, John Lawler, Jane Anderson, alias Mollie Lewis, John Mahoney, Mary Daly and Dave King were fined from $5 to $10 for disturbing the peace. John Joyce and Mollie McGinty paid $3 each for being drunk on the streets. Louis Sougriett, for trespassing, paid $10. Lizzie Jackson, keeper of a disreputable house, paid $50 for the privilege. Annie Fanchon, inmate of a disreputable house, was assessed $10.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

How They Have Become an Established Class of Business Men.

A Strong Disposition in Certain Quarters to Abolish the System.

The class of business men known as commercial travelers has grown up since the war. Previous to that time the trade of the St. Louis wholesale houses was conducted in an altogether different manner from what it now is. Country dealers came in at certain seasons of the year and laid in their stocks. These purchases were generally made in the spring and fall. During these two seasons the city would be crowded with the country merchants and the business of the popular houses would be immense. Occasionally goods would be purchased by order from the country, but such a thing as the present order system was not conceived of. The fashion of sending out representative of wholesale houses was of course long in vogue in the East before it was here. In 1865 and 1866, the dry good men here began to send their salesmen out to see their country customers with samples of different lines of goods. Then the boot and shoe men followed, then the grocery men, the saddlery men, the hardware men and all the others. There immediately grew up for traveling men, and hundreds of sprightly young men came in from the country and found profitable employment. It soon got so that a great portion of the goods sold from the city were sold by the traveling men from samples. Many houses employed as many as twenty men in this business and there are to-day not less than twelve hundred commercial travelers who go in and out of St. Louis. The Western Commercial Travelers' Association, formed by men of this class, is a very large and respectable body of gentlemen and is one of the strongest organizations in the country.

There has developed a strong disposition lately to make an attempt to break up the system of commercial travelers. It is claimed by many that it has got to be to the houses that support it that it will ultimately result in general disaster. As long as two years ago the large grocery house of Greeley, Burnham & Co., of this city, dispensed with all traveling men and resumed the old plan of business. This house employed eight men on the road, and to dispense with their services in the face of so much competition was, of course, a daring experiment. The proprietors express themselves as highly satisfied and declare that they had larger sales and larger profits last year than ever before in the history of the house, which has been in existence since 1838. The success achieved by Greeley, Burnham & Co. has had the effect of causing other wholesale grocery houses to seriously consider the adoption of the same policy, and one firm has lately made an attempt to get all other grocery men in the city to unite in a resolution not to employ any traveling men. So far this attempt has met with no considerable success, but it has resulted in the extensive discussion of the matter by business men generally. The opponents of the commercial travelers' system say that it has come to be unprofitable, and if continued in St. Louis it is simply because it exists in Chicago and other rival cities. It is said that there is really no profit whatever in the goods now sold by salesmen on the road, that the business has come to be too much cut up, and that the cost of keeping men on the road is too great for the narrow margin in the profits of these times. When a man, for instance, goes out to sell for a grocery house nowadays, it is not as it used to be. He cannot sell anything like

SO FULL A LINE OF GOODS.

He offers to sell teas. His customer says he buys teas from a house that deals exclusively in that article. He offers to sell tobacco, it is the same thing, and so on with a long list of goods. The average cost of keeping men on the road is about $2,500 per year for each one. Salaries range from $50 to $150 per month. The average is about $100. Expenses run about $3 50 a day near the city. In such countries as New Mexico the expenses run up to $7 a day. As a general thing the expenses run up fully as much as the salary, making, as before stated, the average cost of traveling salesmen about $2,500 per year. It is no uncommon thing for a single house to employ as many as twenty men on the road, which entails a total cost of not less than $50,000 per annum. It is not surprising, therefore, that proprietors should look about for some cheaper way of doing business.

It is doubtful, however, if a system that has come to be so thoroughly established can be very easily dispensed with.

ASH WEDNESDAY

Observed With the Usual Services in Catholic and Episcopal Churches.

To-day is Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent, and all social festivities in fashionable circles will be suspended for forty days and, metaphorically, the world of the haut ton will wear sackcloth and ashes and fast for the quinquennial season. The Catholic Church celebrates Lent with more strictness than any other denomination. It is also observed to a certain degree by the Episcopalians, and extra services are held in their churches. Of late years the general observance of the Lenten period has fallen into disuse. There was a time when its presence was severely felt by the theaters. The audiences were exceedingly slim during the forty days of abstinence and it was usually a hard time for actors. All that is now changed and Lent scarcely affects the theatrical attendance. It is only the ultra devout and pious who act up to the strict letter of the ecclesiastical ordinances. Fashionable society, however, still affects a certain respect for the orthodox celebration, and balls, parties and routs are rarely given during the forty days preceding Easter.

To-day, Ash Wednesday, was celebrated with the usual ceremonies in the Catholic Churches which were well thronged by the attendants at mass this forenoon. The Episcopal churches also held special services.

At the different Catholic Churches special masses were celebrated. Throughout the morning numbers of people could be seen along the streets wending their way to church where the opening services of the Lenten season were performed. In addition to the usual week day low masses high masses were celebrated in all the churches. The ashes of the palm were blessed in all the churches with the usual solemn ceremonies, at the conclusion of which the faithful approached the holy table, and while there bending in prayer the priest, attended by the altar boys and acolytes, signed each of the applicants with the sign of the cross after dipping his fingers in the palm ashes, at the same time uttering in Latin the solemn reminder, "Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return." After all had apgroached the railing and received the solemn memento on their foreheads they returned to the pews and assisted at a high mass which was celebrated in all the churches at the conclusions of the Ash Wednesday services.

To-day the regular Lenten services of the "Way of the Cross" and similar ceremonies begin. It also opens the season of novenas, or nine days prayer. Many private persons among the faithful suffering from ill-health, or desiring some special grace, with their near friends begin novenas, praying for nine days to come, and at the end of that time approaching holy communion.

The First District Police Court.

The First District Police Court had a grist of but twenty cases to-day, few of which were of any importance except to the parties concerned. The most interesting suit is that against John Talon for carrying concealed weapons. Mr. and Mrs. Briggs have had some matrimonial unpleasantness, which culminated in the separation of the happy pair. Mrs. Briggs took up her residence with Mr. Talon, a course of action which Mr. Briggs highly disproved, threatening to kill the gay Lothario, who was basking in his wife's smiles. The other night he dropped around on the unconventional message and raised a small circus, and Mrs. Briggs put a revolver in Talon's pocket without his knowledge. For this little indiscretion of hers Mr. Talon was fined $10, Miss Laura St. John was prosecuted for the ownership of an alleged vicious and savage dog. The evidence in the case was extremely conflicting, and the trouble was ended by the discharge of the dog's owner. Benjamin Barenstein was arrested for carrying concealed weapons. He had had a row with a party whose name could not be heard, but who is a clerk in Smith pawn-shop on Sixth and Morgan. The row culminated in Barenstein's arrest, and this morning in his discharge on costs. With the finding of a number of soiled doves $10 apiece, the proceedings of the day closed.

THE BALL IN MOTION.

St. Louis Wide Awake and Working for the National Convention.

Meeting at the Lindell Last Evening—Action of the Committee of Five.

Last evening, in pursuance of a call signed by a number of prominent citizens, a meeting was held in Parlor 22 of the Lindell Hotel, to take action towards securing the holding of the Democratic National Convention in St. Louis. Among those present were John G. Priest, G. Van Waggoner, George Knapp, John Knapp, A. J. Garesche, Joseph Pulitzer, Gen. Golden, Col. Pratt, Nicholas Bell, Joseph Griswold, Joseph Gerardi, Chas. Gibson, Richard Walsh, F. A. McGarahan, D. Robert Barclay, W. H. H. Russell, A. W. Slayback, D. P. Rowland, R. D. Lancaster, Capt. W. W. Ivory, Thos. Henley, Col. Conde, Joseph McEntire, John Eberlin, Judge Munford, David C. Marsh, E. C. Cabell, J. L. Carlisle, Judge Wickham, David Armstrong, W. H. Horner, P. Moran, James Gallagher, Dan Kerwin, J. G. Prather, George Mills, J. C. Normile, Thos. F. Farrell, Michael Reilly, W. B. Thompson and some seventy others. Mr. John G. Priest was selected chairman and Mr. J. W. McEntire secretary. A letter was read from Alex. Smith, President of the Merchants' Exchange, tendering the use of the magnificent hall and adjoining rooms in the Chamber of Commerce to the convention if it should be held here.

Mr. Eberlin offered a resolution that a committee of five be appointed and authorized to proceed to Washington to advocate the claims of St. Louis before the National Democratic Committee and that they also take with them the written pledges of the hotel proprietors that rates should not be increased.

Mr. Pulitzer thought five not sufficient to canvass thirty-eight members and moved to amend by making the number fifteen.

Col. Slayback urged that the resolution should specify citizens regardless of party.

Judge Munford said the convention was a Democratic one, and the committee should be composed of Democrats.

Col. Armstrong supported this view. The Democratic convention should be held in a Democratic city, in a Democratic State. The Republicans always held theirs in their strongholds. St. Louis, therefore, suould have the convention.

The resolution, as amended, was passed, that a committee of five be chosen by the meeting to assist the Chair in selecting fifteen gentlemen to proceed to Washington.

Mr. Gibson remarked that the hotel accommodations had been considerably enlarged in St. Louis since the meeting of the last convention.

The following gentlemen were chosen by the meeting to select the delegation to proceed to Washington: Charles Gibson, S. Las Bent, D. H. Armstron, D. P. Rowland and A. W. Slayback.

The meeting then adjourned, and the committee of five held an executive session.

THIS MORNING.

A POST-DISPATCH reporter called on Col. Slayback this morning and ascertained that the committee had not completed their list of delegates last evening. The committee would resume its labors this afternoon, when a session would be held at half-past four at the Lindell, and the list of gentlemen who were to be selected to go to Washington fully determined. The committee wished to select men of influence who were intimate with the members of the National Democratic Committee, and who would also accept the position. The list would be announced this evening.

Col. Slayback believed the outlook was very favorable for St. Louis. Mr. Priest would employ all his influence on behalf of this city and the committee of fifteen would also ably advocate its claims. St. Louis, he thought, ought to have the convention. It was the Western central point of railroad and water transportation; was the most easily accessible for all the delegates to the convention from north, south, east and west. The pledges which the city had given at the last convention had been faithfully kept and he had not heard of a single complaint from any visitor. The railroad and water situation of St. Louis entitled it to the convention and he believed that with earnest action the convention could be secured for St. Louis.

FOR THEIR IRISH FRIENDS.

A Liberal Donation from a Mercantile House at Windsor, Missouri.

The following letter was received to-day and turned over with bill of lading to the Merchants' Exchange:

Hon. Jos. O'Neill.

DEAR SIR:—Enclosed find B. L. car white-mixed corn, to be disposed of for the benefit of our friends in Ireland. We rely on you to make the best disposition of it you can.

Yours respectfully,
STAFFORD & LIVINGSTON.

Windsor, Mo.

It has not yet been decided whether to sell this at the public mass-meeting, to be held on 'Change to-morrow at 12 m., or turn the car load over to some city corn-meal miller, have him grind it, and send the meal along with the balance of the supplies to be forwarded to Ireland. A large attendance is desired at the mass-meeting to-morrow, and President Smith wishes the papers to give it prominence. It is expected that the railroads will carry the contributions free to the sea-board, and perhaps ocean freight may be obtained in the same manner.

ABOUT TOWN.

GERHARD HILKE, a blacksmith, got a bad fall from a wagon yesterday in Lowell.

FIRE alarm box on Russell and California avenue was found plugged up with clay last night.

WILLIAM MAHONEY, engineer of the Glendale Zinc Works, was badly beaten by a couple of tramps yesterday afternoon.

LAWRENCE HAURATTY was held up by a couple of garroters, on the corner of Twentieth and O'Fallon streets, late last night, but he scared them off by calling police.

ROBERT SATTERFIELD, a lad from Mount Vernon, Illinois, got lost yesterday, and spent the greater part of the day at the Central Sub-Station. Sergeant Hall recognized the boy at last and paid his fare home.

A Card From Dr. Love.

The following communication was published in the morning papers:

ST. LOUIS, February 10, 1880.—The POST-DISPATCH of this evening has notice of a damage suit against me by one Bohall, the foundation of which is an alleged conspiracy between Mrs. Bohall and myself. Two reputable attorneys, to my knowledge, have been asked to bring this case, but on investigation both refused to bring it. Knowing this, I, when a man called on me yesterday representing himself as a carpenter and as the bearer of a message from one Charles B. Smythe, an attorney, to the effect that Mr. Smythe wanted to see about the "Bohall matter," I felt it only right to confer with Messrs. Walker & Walker, the attorneys with whom I had previously consulted in the matter. What I had consulted them about was what measures I ought to take against Bohall in regard to various attempts at extortion made on me by him, who wanted me to pay him money to "hush the matter up." My attorneys on a full understanding of all the facts advised me to let Bohall alone, as one beneath my notice, and when he made an aggressive move (if he should ever do so) in the courts, to fight him to the bitter end. So when I told my attorneys of the message of the carpenter, purporting to come from Mr. Smythe, they confidently told me to pay no attention to it. Acting on their advice, I paid no attention to the message. Now I find I am sued by Bohall through his attorneys, Mr. Chas. B. Smythe and Mr. T. A. Culver.

I do not want to fight this matter in the newspapers, but in the courts. Yet I feel that I ought, at this stage, as a professional man, whose reputation is all in all to him, to protest, as I now do, against the opprobrium cast upon my good name, and I do wish to say that I am ready at any time to go before a jury and let them decide on the issues involved in the case, the result of which I am confident will be my vindication from these false and fancied charges against me. Yours, etc.,

I. N. LOVE, M. D.

The Boucicault Idea.

A POST-DISPATCH reporter this morning called upon the theatrical managers of St. Louis to ascertain their views upon Dion Boucicault's proposition that all the theaters of the country give a benefit on St. Patrick's Day for the Irish sufferers.

Mr. Charles Pope, of Pope's Theater, thought there were several practical difficulties in the way of the scheme, although he was disposed to favor the scheme.

Mr. Spalding, of the Olympic and the Opera-house, seemed to doubt Mr. Boucicault's own generosity, and thought that the best method of getting money was to start a subscription among the theatrical people.

Mr. Harry Noxon, of the Comique, thought that his theater would come into line on the subject, but could not speak positively in the absence of Manager Smith.

A Cincinnati Delegation in St. Louis.

Jos. M. Reardon, John Zumstein and B. T. Hopkins County Commissioners, W. S. Capeller County Auditor, C. W. Baker County Solicitor, Dr. A. L. Carrick, Coroner, and Mr. Chas. S. Fisher, all very prominent Cincinnatians, are taking in the sights of St. Louis to-day. The party is stopping at the Lindell. This delegation has come to the city with the special purpose of examining different police buildings here with a view to the improvement of their own village. They passed the greater part of the morning in the Four Courts and jail, whose arrangement they studied for some time. They complimented the general details of the Four Courts very highly, but evidently did not take much stock in the City Hall. They will remain in St. Louis to-day and to-morrow.

CINCINNATI, February 11.—The preliminary trial of Garland Williams and Rial Patterson, two colored men, were arrested last week on the charge of murdering Darby Martin in December 1863, has been held at Georgetown, Kentucky and resulted in the discharge of Garland Williams and holding Patterson without bail to answer to the crime of murder.

Breadstuffs and Provisions.

MORNING BOARD—FUTURES.

Wheat—Although there was an advance in price, the feeling was still so unsettled that prices were very irregular. COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE FOR PARTITION.—Notice is hereby given that the Circuit Court within and for the city of St. Louis on the 30th day of January, 1880, in a certain cause pending in said court, wherein Charles A. Faris, M. Clemence Faris, John F. Carton, Helen A. Carton, Eugene H. Benoist, Louis A. Benoist, Theodore Benoist, Leo De Smet Benoist and Howard A. Benoist were ex parte petitioners for partition, rendered judgment that partition among the petitioners be made of a certain tract or parcel of land owned by the petitioners in fee simple, situated in the north half of block No. 42 of DeWard's survey of the city commons, and being now in said city of St. Louis, and more particularly described as follows, to-wit: commencing at a point where the southern line of Rappahannock street intersects the western line of the Little Prairie and running thence southwardly along the western line of said Little Prairie, 145 feet, more or less, to the intersection with the western line of Michigan avenue, thence southwardly along the western line of Michigan avenue 354 feet 6 inches to the southern line of the Durand tract, thence westwardly along the southern line of the Durand tract, 127 feet 3 inches to the western line of the Little Prairie, thence southwardly along said last mentioned line 18 feet 3 inches to a stone set for the northeast corner of the land owned by Charless and La Bourgeois, thence westwardly and parallel to Rappahannock street 515 feet 9 inches to a stone corner, thence northwardly along the eastern line of land formerly owned by Wm. N. Switzer and nearly parallel to the western line of the Little Prairie, 551 feet 7 inches to Rappahannock street, thence eastwardly along the southern line of Rappahannock street 519 feet 5 inches to the place of beginning. And the said court, finding that said parcel of land was not susceptible of partition in kind among the petitioners without great prejudice to the owners, then and there ordered and adjudged that the same be sold according to law, and appointed the undersigned a special commissioner for that purpose. Now, therefore, the undersigned, in obedience to said order of sale, and by authority of law, will, as such commissioner, expose said parcel of land and premises to sale at public auction to the highest bidder for cash at the east front door of the Court-house in said city of St. Louis, on

COURT NEWS.

The Suit Against the Union Depot Company.

Cases of Interest in the Circuit Court.

A Railroad Suit.

The case of James Fox versus the Union Depot Company for $3,000 damages, resulting from using Twelfth street as a railroad track, was given to the jury in Circuit Court No. 1 this morning. The plaintiff, in his petition, alleges that for a long time he has been, and is still, the owner of a lot of ground on Twelfth street. That on this property he erected two buildings, one of which he occupies as a place of business, and the other as a residence. He claims that Twelfth street has for more than twenty years been a public highway, and has been graded, macadamized and paved. The petition states that the lot is so situated that said Twelfth street is the only means of approach or access to, and the only outlet from his property. He continues and states that during May, 1875, the defendant tore up and destroyed said street, 100 feet from plaintiff's property, and placed thereon cars, locomotives and tracks to such an extent that it completely blocked up and obstructed the highway and public street. The plaintiff alleges that said obstruction has continued from that date to the present time, and by reason of that blockade the means of reaching plaintiff's property have been destroyed, and great loss has been entailed upon him. He places his damages at $3,000 and asks a judgment for that amount. The defendant in the answer claims that he has complied with the laws and ordinances regulating the construction of the railroad and is consequently not liable for damages.

Divorce.

Lena Weiss was married to Fritz Weiss in the city of Cincinnati on the 1st day of September, 1870. Lena now wants a divorce and for that purpose filed a petition this morning to have the marriage set aside and give her the custody of the children. In her prayer for such matrimonial dissolution she says that from the day of her marriage up to the 17th of June, 1879, she faithfully conducted herself as a loving wife. Her husband, so she claims, has been guilty of repeated acts of adultery with a captivating widow of this city. As another ground of action, the plaintiff alleges that Fritz is becoming a vagrant within the meaning of the law, in that he has wholly failed to support his family. For these reasons Lena considers that her existence would be more joyous if released from the aforesaid Fritz, and the divorce is consequently demanded.

Suit About Sewing Machines.

A replevin suit of the American Button-hole Overseaming and Sewing Machine Company versus Edward Wright came up this morning before Judge Thayer. The suit, concerning the possession of six sewing machines, was originally brought before a Justice of the Peace, when the value of the property was assessed at $140. A judgment was rendered for the defendant, and 1 cent damages was given for the detention of the articles. The case was appealed, and came up, as noted, to-day. A number of witnesses were examined, showing the value and circumstances attending the transfer of the sewing machines.

Legal Notes.

The Court of Appeals will convene to-morrow morning.

Circuit Court No. 3 has adjourned until next Saturday morning.

The Keokuk Northern Line Packet receiver case still continues before Judge Lindley.

THE BALDWIN MYSTERY.

A St. Louis Postal Card Writer not Believed by the Cincinnati Officials.

It will be remembered that about three months ago Mr. Harry Baldwin was shot and killed in Cincinnati by a man named Scholer. According to Detective Amthauer, who was in St. Louis some time ago, the citizens of Cincinnati are convinced that Scholer shot Baldwin accidentally. That gentleman made his case a bad one by not telling the straightforward truth in the matter, but by making sundry theatrical attempts to throw the police off his trail altogether. Among other clumsy devices with which he attempted to shield himself was the hiding of a hat and a pistol in the alley way near where the homicide occurred. Public opinion has never been quite satisfied on the point, however, and a new interest was added to the mystery by a postal card coming from St. Louis to Mr. S. H. Drew, the prosecuting attorney of Hamilton County, written by a Mr. Franz Hart, from St. Louis, and stating that he was a witness to the homicide and could throw much additional light on the inquiry. Mr. Hart would up his communication with the statement that he was too poor to pay his expenses on to Cincinnati, but if the authorities would send him a pass he would come forward and testify. With these facts before him, a POST-DISPATCH reporter essayed to discover what Mr. Hart knew about the killing, and fortunately he encountered a delegation of prominent Cincinnatians who only this morning arrived in St. Louis. Mr. Capellar, the Hamilton county auditor, saw the postal which Mr. Drew had received, and said that in view of all the facts in the case the authorities had decided not to do anything. Dr. A. L. Carrick, the Cincinnati Coroner, told the POST-DISPATCH reporter that if Mr. Franz Hart or any other man would call on him at the Lindell to-day or to-morrow morning and convince him that he knew anything about the homicide, he would pay that man's fare to Cincinnati and back himself.

Chief McDonough believes that Mr. Hart is working an ingenious scheme to secure free passage to Cincinnati, and the general opinion is that the Chief's is the correct solution of Mr. Hart's connection with the Baldwin mystery.

East St. Louis.

Judge Ware, of the City Court, was occupied to-day hearing motions.

'Squire Bunyan was occupied to-day hearing the cases of Julia Jones, petit larceny, and Matthew Baldwin, malicious trespass.

A meeting of the Council was called for 10 a. m., yesterday, but, as there was no quorum, adjournment was had until to-day.

Yesterday the police made twenty-one arrests. Many of the parties were released for various reasons. The cells at the Station-house are all still occupied.

Mr. Bat Long received a communication from Gov. Cullom, last night, in answer to an invitation to address the mass meeting to be held at Heim's Hall, on the 15th, in aid of the Irish sufferers, which stated that he would be in Chicago until the twenty-third and could not possibly be present to address the East St. Louis meeting, a fact which he greatly regretted. Messrs. Hanifan and Rafter have made arrangements to have the following railroads bring passengers to East St. Louis and return at half fare: Vandalia, I. and St. L., O. and M. from Caseyville, and C. and A. from Alton. A number of speakers have been secured.

KRIEGER SENTENCED.

J. Phil. Krieger, Sr., Found Guilty as Charged.

And Three Months in Jail and $500 Fine Imposed.

J. Philip Krieger, Sr., the well known president of the Broadway Savings Bank, has been standing his trial now for a number of weeks before the Court of Criminal Correction, charged with having wilfully, knowingly and corruptly sworn falsely on the seventh day of January, 1879 to a statement of the financial condition of the Broadway Savings Bank made by him to the Secretary of State. Upon this charge the Court, this morning, found Mr. Krieger guilty and sentenced him to three months' imprisonment in the city jail and to pay a fine of $500.

In pronouncing sentence Judge Cady remarked that the defendant's high standing in the community and the interest taken in the case made it an important one. The statement referred to was the one of December 28, 1878. Mr. John Adams, an expert, showed the Court what that statement should have been, and there was a most astonishing difference between what it was and what it should have been. There is on every item of the assets. "Loans undoubtedly good" are $82,641.53 less than reported. "Loans and discounts undoubtedly good on real estate security," difference $30,000. "Other bonds and stocks at their present market price;" difference, $36,435 56. "Due from other banks, good, on sight drafts;" difference, $87,823 64. "Exchange maturing and matured;" difference, $180,425 13. Besides this no mention was made of the balance of the overdrafts, $77,539 91. In order to make this item balance, the liability to depositors was falsely understated to the same amount. These are the principal points in which the statements sworn to by the defendant are false, the total aggregating about half a million of dollars. The expert introduced by the defense, Mr. Spinney, stated that he had no doubt these figures were correct. After delivering the above opinion, the Judge went on to say: "Upon the evidence in the case I am forced to find the defendant guilty in the manner and form as charged in the indictment, and though a most painful duty, I must pass upon him the sentence of the," which was stated above to be three months in jail and a fine of $500.

Judge Clover at once filed a motion in arrest and for a new trial, and offered himself as bond for Mr. Krieger's appearance. The motions will come up for argument on Saturday.

After the rendering of the sentence a reporter asked what he thought of it, and he explained, with much emotion, that he thought it an unjust one. "I am an old man that has held with honor many public places, and now to have this stigma put upon me is too much—too much," and the old gentleman almost broke down. "It is bad for me," he continued, "because the cashier happened to be my son. Why did he let me buy the stock which he knew was rotten? I can only explain it by saying he had an evil genius and that it led him away."

"You are totally ruined, are you not?"

"Oh, I will have nothing left, but I do not mind the money, it is the character."

"Has your son any money now?"

"I think not. I have only given him ten dollars since the trial—he only has what is given to him."
